aged men, were severely condemned by the press as no longer representing the new Japan, which desired that the government should pass from the hands of a few men into the hands of the people.

Count Okuma filmself had been a member of the genro, but his radicalism made him no longer welcome among the bureaucrats and he resigned.

The astonishing feature of this most remarkable chapter in recent Japanese history is the shift from a man of the Kiyoura type to Count Okuma. The latter has always joyfully preached his belief that he will live to be 125 years old. This gives some inkling of the jocular, democratic nature of the man

Most Interesting Personality.

But perhaps the most interesting personality in the new cabinet is Yukio Ozaki, former mayor of Tokio, and one of the leaders of the opposition in the lower house. He has been warring always for a more representative government, and he is especially opposed to the domination of the army and navy clans. He has just written a series of papers on constitutional government, with such headings as "Clan Influence in Lawmaking." "How the People Have Been Kept Under Control" and "The Navy Must Be Cleaned Before It Is Expanded."

He declared that the true constitutionalists in Japan demand a fair field and no favor. "At present," he said, "they are bound hand and foot in the iron chains of laws and regulations and conventional official ideas, while their opponents are quite free under the protection of the same laws and regulations."

The reformer concluded: "All intelligent observers have recently noticed great changes in the political psychology of Japan, but few see its true cause. The mobs, the demonstrations and all kinds of excitement have but one root cause, namely, the strong desire and increasing struggle for equal opportunities." navy clans. He has just written a series
